e. Description of Key Experiments

1. Baseline & Relevance (v1–v2) Our initial Body-only BM25 implementation failed (Precision ≈ 0.0) due to severe length bias. We integrated Title and Anchor indices using binary ranking and tuned weights (Title: 10, Anchor: 3, Body: 1). This effectively solved the relevance issue, boosting Precision@10 to 0.58, though latency increased to ~ 3.4 s as the engine processed massive posting lists for common terms.

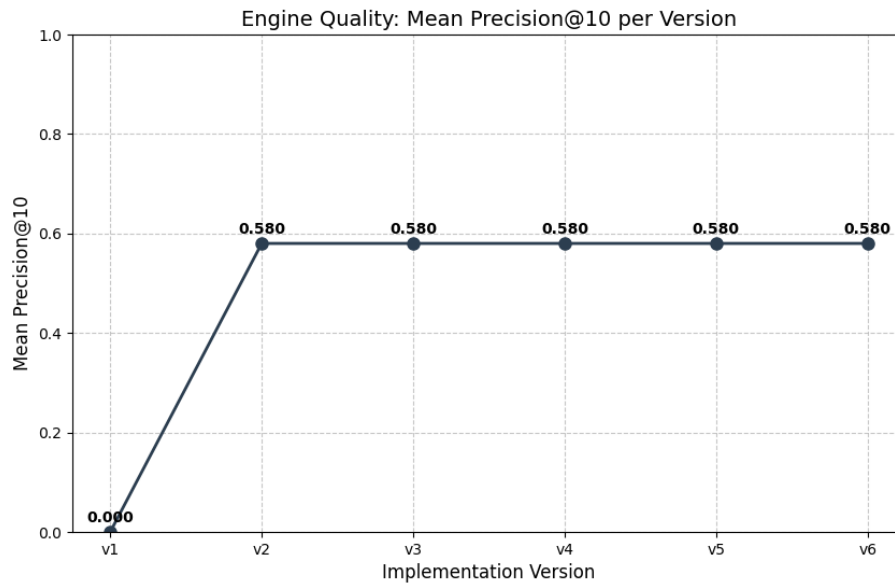

2. Efficiency Experiments (v3–v4) To address latency, we hypothesized that high-frequency "stopwords" were the bottleneck. We applied Document Frequency cutoffs (skipping terms > 500 k docs) first to the Body, then to Anchor/Title indices.

- Result: Surprisingly, latency remained stagnant (~ 3.3 s).
- Finding: While theoretically sound, the optimization failed to break the < 1.0 s barrier on our hardware, suggesting the bottleneck is likely Disk I/O contention on the VM rather than CPU processing.

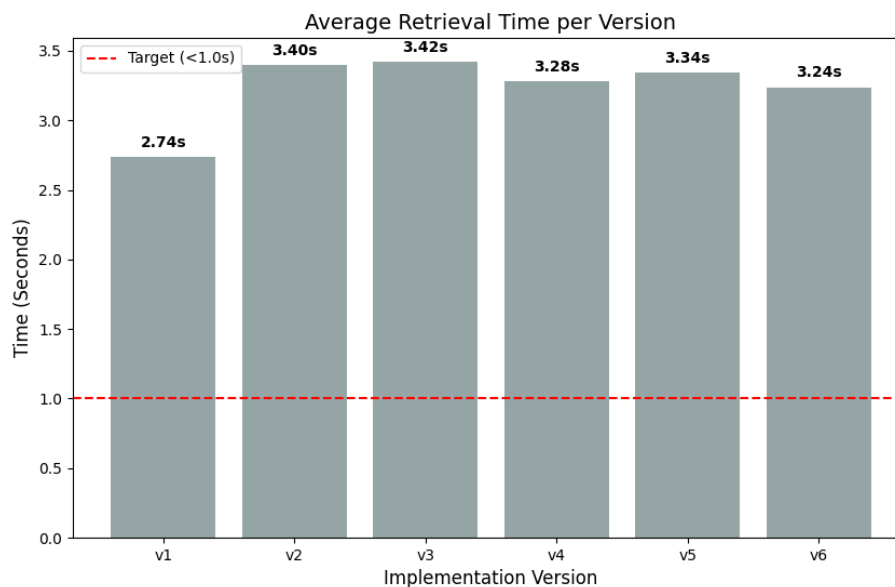

3. Tie-Breaking for Exact Matches (v5) Binary ranking created ties for single-word queries, causing the engine to prefer high-PageRank variations (e.g., "Human Development Index") over exact matches ("Human"). We implemented a "Shortest Title" heuristic as a secondary sort key, which successfully forced the engine to prioritize exact matches for better qualitative results.

4. Multithreading (v6) We attempted to parallelize the Body, Title, and Anchor searches using ThreadPoolExecutor. The results showed negligible improvement, confirming that Python's Global Interpreter Lock (GIL) and thread management overhead outweighed the benefits for this specific I/O-bound workload.

h. Qualitative Evaluation – The “human” query

We evaluated the query "Human" across our different search components. This single-word query is a perfect "stress test" because it is a broad, high-frequency concept that appears in a lot of documents.

1. Good Performance: Title Search

- Result: The engine correctly identified the main article "Human" as Rank 1.
- Analysis: This success was a direct result of our "Shortest Title" tie-breaking logic. Thousands of articles (e.g., "Human rights") contain the query term and received identical binary scores of 1. Without our fix, the engine would have returned "Human Development Index" due to its higher PageRank (526 vs 383). By sorting first by Score (Desc) and then by Title Length (Asc), the engine prioritized the exact match "Human" (5 chars) over longer titles.

2. Poor Performance: Anchor Search

- Result: Top results were generic, high-PageRank pages like "United States" and "Association football".
- Dominant Factor: The failure stemmed from Binary Ranking. Thousands of unrelated pages have at least one incoming link containing "human" (e.g., "human rights" linking to "United States"). Since all matches received a score of 1, the engine broke ties using PageRank, simply returning the most famous pages in the corpus that happened to have a single matching anchor.
- Solution: Switch to Count Ranking. The page "Human" has thousands of incoming links with that anchor, whereas "United States" has few. Counting matches would separate the signal from the noise.

3. Main (Ensemble) Search Analysis

- Result: "Human Development Index" (Rank 1) beat "Human" (Rank 2).
- Why: Our ensemble formula ($10 * \text{Title} + 3 * \text{Anchor} + 1 * \text{Body} + 2.5 * \log(\text{PR})$) does not currently include the "Shortest Title" penalty. Since both pages tied on the Title score, the raw PageRank advantage of "Human Development Index" (526) outweighed the main article (383).

- Takeaway: To perfect the ensemble, we must explicitly incorporate a negative weight for title length into the scoring formula to penalize partial matches.
